

Interprofessional Education Excellence Award

Anne L. Derouin, DNP, RN, CPNP, FAANP

Dr. Anne L. Derouin joined the Duke University School of Nursing (DUSON) faculty in 2011 and currently serves as the lead faculty for the PNP-PC program at DUSON. She is a certified pediatric nurse practitioner with more than 30 years of experience in pediatric nursing, and for more than fifteen years has collaborated with an inter-professional team to provide primary healthcare services for children and adolescents through school and community-based health centers. She received her BSN from the University of Michigan, her MSN and Doctorate of Nursing Practice (DNP) from DUSON.

Dr. Derouin teaches in the MSB program at the Duke School of Medicine and is a frequent guest lecturer on adolescent topics for the Community and Family Medicine and Pediatrics departments at Duke. She also serves on the executive core for the Duke-Johnson & Johnson Nurse Leadership program and the advisory board of the Poe Health Education Center of North Carolina. She is an adolescent clinical expert for the National Association of Pediatric Nurse Practitioners (NAPNAP) and an advocacy fellow for the National Assembly of School-based Health Centers and NAPNAP. She is a past-president of the North Carolina School Community Health Alliance and a chair of the Adolescent Health Special Interest Group of NAPNAP. She was recently elected to NAPNAP National Executive Leadership team as member-at-large.

“Dr. Derouin demonstrates the true meaning of interprofessional collaboration in her respectful manner, thoughtful contributions and gentle guidance for the faculty and students. She has a remarkable ability to bring extraordinary perspectives and ideas to others without diminishing them and actually enhancing their own feelings of worth; a deft ability that seems intrinsic to her. Dr. Derouin is an outstanding candidate for this award because she has genuine abilities that cannot be taught, for making IPE a reality.”
